

In the passages “Please Eat Your Vegetables” and “What a Waste” the authors discuss how much food people are wasting in the United States. Programs need to be created to help cut down on the food waste in America.

The first way to cut down on food waste is to use computer technology to help track the extra food and get food banks and soup kitchens to get the food. According to Source 1, restaurants in New York City take their extra food to a warehouse where it is catalogued into a computer and the delivered to 400 food banks and soup kitchens.

The text also states that restaurants can have accounts with the food bank and the restaurants can notify the food bank when they have more food.
